Broad Strokes:

From the Winery:

Sagemoor's parent company, Allan Bros. Inc., is a multi-generational family-owned and operated company with a rich history in agriculture beginning in the 1930's in the Yakima Valley. In 2014, Allan Brothers purchased Sagemoor Vineyards from its original founders who began planting vineyards in 1972. For over fifty years, Sagemoor Vineyards has provided premium wine grapes from our iconic vineyards to dozens of the most renowned wineries and winemakers in Washington.

Sagemoor's properties include over 1,300 acres of planted vineyards, comprised of six separate vineyards: Bacchus, Dionysus, Gamache and Sagemoor are located in the White Bluffs AVA along the Columbia River near Pasco, WA. Weinbau is located in the Wahluke Slope AVA near Mattawa, WA and Southwind near Milton-Freewater, OR in the Walla Walla Valley AVA.

Appearance:

Nice looking packaging. I do like the vertical branding, the etching of the home vineyards and all the information the label provides to the consumer. The ruby red coloring drops to clear on the edges.

Nose:

Merlot dominant aromatics: ripe plum, cherry, chocolate and spices. That being said, this wine's scent reminds me very much of a Right Bank Bordeaux. Smooth, even, clay in the soil, dusty, and even some lead pencil and stones.

Texture:

Medium bodied. Smooth entry, it also feels like a (youthful) Bordeaux. The feel in the palate is quite advanced for a wine at this price level.

Flavor:

Lead pencil pieces the red plum fruit, bringing forward notes of sage, anise and elegance of Bordeaux. Cherry juice with an edge of pomegranate holding it in place. Long finish lingers!

Serving Suggestions

This is a startling wine for the price. It will go ten years. Get a case and drink one a year.
